Take some charcoal briquettes. Crush them into a fine powder. Take some fabric and place the crushed charcoal in the center. Fold it over and sew along the edges. Make sure the finished pouch is large enough to cover your mouth and nostrils. Moisten the entire package. Hold over mouth and nostrils when breathing.

This is a method used to survive all the chemical attacks. The Kurds used it to survive Saddam Hussein. Demonstrators in Seattle used it to protect themselves from police during the WTO Demonstrations.

In the future, if you're in Port Townsend, exiting from a work out at Evergreen Fitness or PT Athletic Club. and you notice the smell of the PT Paper Mill in the Air, or if you're shopping for furniture at Peninsula Floor and Furnishing or Habitat for Humanity, and notice that the smell of the mill has seeped into every item they have for sale, or if you're sitting in the Rose Theater or one of our gloriously restored Victorian Hotels and notice the smell of the PT Paper Mill in every seat and piece of wall paper, just cover your mouth and nose with your Improvised Charcoal Briquette Gas Mask and know that you're doing your bit for your community. If these others were willing to do this to prevail, can we do any less for 200 jobs (excluding layoffs)? How much more sensible than updating aged operating equipment and abiding by pollution standards.
